A middle-aged radio DJ managed to spontaneously remember the name and phone number of a mystery caller who recently phoned in a song request that made him cry. The stunned man, who works at the Clear Channel-owned radio station in New Hampshire, was so overcome with joy that he hung up the phone and shared the unexpected encounter with a friend. "I was giving him his usual clip show, and this guy was like, 'I need to tell you something,'" the radio DJ told Boston NPR affiliate WBUR. "He was sobbing and crying. It was a really emotional thing. So it was one of those where you just wanted to say, 'What is going on here? Why is this happening?'" The teary caller told the DJ about a recent breakup, and what he'd left behind after ending his relationship with a woman he'd dated for five years. "At the end of the show, he called and asked to listen to a song by the Cranberries, and when the song was over, he said, 'I cry every time I hear that song,'" the DJ said, weeping. The DJ then decided to call the caller right back to see if he was interested in hearing the song again. "I said, 'Listen, if you call and ask me to play it again, I'm going to cry.'" But the DJ didn't immediately tell the caller that he'd thought of his name as he was putting the call through. "I didn't believe it," the DJ said. "At that point, I was thinking, 'I'm not crying.'" But when he heard the caller's voice, he was overcome once again. "That really made me cry," he said. "It was wonderful." The first is dewweb, the second is standard Firefox, and the third is just an instance of the Firefox browser. I access dewweb from the Firefox instance via Ctrl+Tab. I'd like to be able to quickly navigate between these views using the keyboard shortcut Ctrl+L/Ctrl+K. I figure I should probably go with the Ctrl+L route, but I am having trouble binding this to a keyboard shortcut. The answers on this question don't seem to apply here. When I navigate to the keyboard shortcuts dialog, I can't find the binding for Ctrl+L. A: I found that I had to make a custom keyboard layout, and in that dialog, I could find the Ctrl+L shortcut. H.
